Elaboration of an attractiveness map

Based on an arrangement of topographic features, geomorphology and lithology, edaphic factors, occurrences of water.

An important variability in expansion of the sedentary populations and in exploitation of the land at different periods was underlined.

Varying attractiveness over time

The attractiveness of a zone can be increased in a temporary or definitive way, especially due to water supply systems.